Solemnity of Pentecost

“Mary, Protector of the Traumatized”

Recently, I met a young Filipina (whom I will call Lupe) who had a story to tell. Lupe came to the United States approximately ten years ago. Although born and raised in the Philippines, Lupe’s father was an American citizen. As a newly minted university graduate with a degree in nursing, Lupe was recruited by an agency that supplied nurses to major U.S. hospitals experiencing acute nursing shortages.

Since her mother was deceased, and Lupe had completed her education, her father decided to return with the family to the U.S. Lupe declined her father’s offer to add her name to the family application for entrance into the U.S. because the agency took care of this. The bright, young, and independent woman obtained her work visa for a position at a prestigious metropolitan hospital. The recruiting agency promised that they would then begin the process of securing her permanent residency through their legal offices.

Lupe continued her studies as she advanced in her profession and eventually became respected in her field. She planned to obtain her Ph.D. in nursing, and bought a home. She visited her lawyer regularly, paid his fees, and was assured that her application was “on track.”

After seven years of payments, and noticing that all the other nurses who had come to the U.S. with her had received their “green cards,” Lupe took herself to Immigration and Customs Enforcement. When her turn came, there was a great deal of questioning and discussion. She was told that her work visa had recently expired and that her lawyer had not renewed it. She was instructed to go to another office. When she arrived, she was handcuffed and shackled and taken to the Elizabeth (NJ) Detention Center to await the decision of an immigration judge.

Lupe was taken to a converted warehouse in an industrial section of Elizabeth where as many as 320 immigrant detainees are housed. She was dressed in a prison uniform and renamed with a letter/number combination determined by her dorm name and bed number. The windowless dorm was a combination bedroom, dining room and shower/bathroom. She was stripped of her belongings and forced to shower naked in view of everyone. Utterly unable to notify her employer or family, Lupe slowly realized that she was the victim of both an unscrupulous lawyer, and a blind application of the 1996 law requiring mandatory detention of non-criminal asylum seekers.

Lupe remained in the detention center almost seven months. Female detainees are obliged to silence for long periods of time each day. It was to her Catholic faith and spirituality, the source of her healing gifts, that she turned. She prayed especially to Mary. She meditated on the trauma and suffering that Mary had experienced and how she was sustained by the promises of the Holy Spirit. She prayed the rosary constantly.

After some weeks, Lupe suddenly found herself insisting that she be called by her name instead of by a number! She began to speak for the needs of uneducated women. She began to teach some of the women to read and write using their Bibles. All the while Mary kept guiding her.

Eventually, her petition was denied. She was to be deported! Handcuffed and shackled once again, she was taken to Newark Airport for the return trip to the Philippines. She kept praying the rosary! Fifteen minutes before boarding the plane, she was called from the line of passengers. An officer informed her that an appeals judge had reviewed her case and that her deportation had been reversed.

Lupe’s story has a similar ring to the story of Immaculée Ilibagiza, who attributed to Mary and to the prayer of the rosary her survival of the Rwandan genocide.

For each woman, the rosary was a form of embodied prayer that kept her grounded and centered in the midst of trauma. For each woman, it was the experience of being an oppressed victim that occasioned the gifts of freedom and liberation by the Holy Spirit. Both women have been compelled to share their stories to call attention to the conditions of oppression in their “developed” and “developing” countries. Both testify to the power of prayer – especially the use of the rosary in traumatic situations.

Is Mary revealing herself anew as “Woman, Protector of the Traumatized?”

This weekend we celebrate Pentecost, "a feast of the universal Church which commemorates the descent of the Holy Spirit upon the Apostles, fifty days after the Resurrection of Christ, on the ancient Jewish festival called the 'feast of weeks,' or Pentecost.

Pentecost is Greek for 'the fiftieth' (day after Easter)."

What would the sages of ancient Israel have to say about the modern world's worship of work and wealth? The Book of Ecclesiastes offers an antidote to these postures through its truthful and timeless observations on life.

Please join us as we explore how the author of Ecclesiastes arrives at these conclusions and discuss the book's implications for modern spirituality. This series will offer a brief introduction to Israel's wisdom literature, an overview of the structure of the Book of Ecclesiastes and a study of selected passages. We will conclude with a discussion of the relevance and applicability of the book to our contemporary circumstances.

The sessions will be led by Brian B. Pinter, parishioner and Director of Campus Ministry at Regis High School.
