The Most Holy Body and Blood of Christ

Come, Have Breakfast

The feast we celebrate today has been around for a very long time, nearly seven hundred years. From its inception, The Most Holy Body and Blood of Christ (formerly Corpus Christi) has celebrated the real presence of Jesus in both bread and wine. Our Catholic understanding from the very beginnings of Christianity has been that the bread consecrated at Mass is not a symbolic reminder of the bread Jesus shared with his apostles at their last supper. The consecrated wine we drink is not wine meant to fill us with pious thoughts about the cup of wine Jesus passed around the table that night.

We believe that when we receive the consecrated host, and drink from the chalice, the full reality of Jesus enters our body. He comes to live in us. As with Mary, the mother of Jesus, our bodies become the dwelling place for his body. Our faith demands that we approach the Eucharist with this understanding, fully aware that we are approaching Christ himself.

Christ comes to us through, of all things, a meal. No act in our material existence is so close to us, or enters so intimately into our bodily life, as eating and drinking. Consider the implications of eating with someone. There's something special about having dinner with someone. There are people you know, and speak with, and shake hands with, but you don't have the kind of relationship that would involve having them over for dinner. That implies a certain connectedness, or at least a desire for connectedness, with that person. Jesus gives himself to us and connects with us through a meal. And meals are things we all must join in groups for. Because, unless you live alone, you normally don't eat alone. Eating and drinking is a social activity rather than a solitary one. The Mass is not meant to be a private devotion. It is intensely personal, but never private. We meet God together when we worship at Mass. We come for nourishment as a group, not as solo diners.

We all know that it is not a good thing when a family rarely eats together due to individual schedules that do not allow for it. In the same way, it is not a good thing when individuals feel they can pray on their own, or seek God on their own terms. Jesus was quite definite about where he wanted us to find him: I tell you most solemnly, unless you eat my flesh and drink my blood you shall not have life in you (John 6:53). This is why we have the Sunday Mass obligation. It is not that the Church wants to lay another burden on us. It is because we really need the food that is being offered at Mass. And Jesus is risking a lot by coming to us in this way, as food. Because people don't always appreciate what they are being served. They prefer something else. Some even become anorexic and badly undernourished.

I think the next time we come to Mass, we might well think of the Gospel scene where seven of the disciples land their fishing boat on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. The time is shortly after Easter. The risen Lord is standing on the shore waiting for them. The text reads:

When they climbed out on shore, they saw a charcoal fire with fish on it and bread.

*Then Jesus said to them:
"Come, have breakfast."*

(John 21:9, 12)
