On the First Sunday of Advent, November 27, the revised English translation of the Latin Roman Missal will begin to be used in all parishes in the United States. This new text contains the prayers the congregation speak or sing at every Mass, as well as all the prayers the priest recites alone. The words the people pray have undergone far fewer changes than those which the priest prays.

This revised text will have a new name. Formerly called the Sacramentary, it will now be known as the Roman Missal. The current Lectionary (the book of Scripture Readings used at Mass) is not being affected.

This is the first major revision of the English Mass texts since 1973. A slightly revised edition was published in 1985, which was much less extensive than originally planned because it had become clear that the revision required was more complex than originally anticipated.

A new edition of the Latin Roman Missal was published in 2002. This Latin text became the basis of the new translation which soon will become the official text of the Roman Rite Mass in the English speaking countries of the world.

Why is this happening?

Since we first began using the vernacular in certain parts of the Mass in 1963, the English translation has been criticized by some liturgists as too conversational and not worthy of the noble realities it signifies. One commentator has put it rather bluntly: “It is God to whom we are speaking, not someone sitting at the table next to us in a restaurant.” In addition, some liturgists thought there were instances where the translation did not capture the proper nuance of the Latin original, or where the Latin original was inaccurately translated.

Influenced by such criticisms, the translators of the newer edition of the Mass prayers have sought to ensure that the English translation corresponds more closely to the exact words and sentence structure of the original Latin source text. There was also a resolve to make the language more formal and more courteous. The aim here was to educate the Catholic faithful to a more reverential way of praying the liturgy.

A second reason for the revised translation was to root us more deeply in Scripture. The words of the Mass frequently allude to passages from the Bible. The revised translation brings more of these allusions to light. An example of where the new wording restores a connection with its Scriptural basis is in the response to the invitation to Communion. We currently say “Lord, I am not worthy to receive you; but only say the word and I shall be healed.” The new version says “Lord, I am not worthy that you should enter under my roof, but only say the word and my soul shall be healed.” This new wording is a more obvious reference to the words of the Roman centurion in the Gospels of Luke and Matthew who petitions Jesus to come and heal his dying servant at home.

A further reason for a new Roman Missal is that many new saints have been added to the Church’s liturgical calendar since 1985. The new edition contains prayers for them, as well as additional prefaces for the Eucharistic Prayers and additional Masses and prayers for various needs and intentions.

There are many who would say that the reform of the Mass texts is meant to serve nothing less than the renewal of the Church, and that the real issue behind the new translation is to foster a deeper understanding of the liturgy and a renewed reverence and appreciation for the Mass. Surely this is an outcome devoutly to be desired.

Rev. William Bergen, S.J.
Associate Pastor

Postscript: You will be seeing a number of Sunday bulletin essays on the New Roman Missal over the next few months. We will also be offering evening discussions in Wallace Hall on individual parts of the revised text. Rev. Thomas Scirghi, S.J., a Jesuit liturgist from Fordham University, will give an overview of the changes on two separate dates in October. See page 5 for details.
