One of the delights of performing great works of composers who flourished centuries before our own is that we are sometimes afforded glimpses of the world in which they lived. Letters, contracts, receipts, and other primary sources document aspects of their lives that expose a bit of the human element behind their work.

In our Sacred Music in a Sacred Space concert this Wednesday evening, we celebrate two great gentlemen of Austria, Franz Joseph Haydn (1732-1809) and his Symphony No. 97, and Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (1756-1791), with his Great Mass in C minor. While the creations of these men are worthy of more study than could be accomplished in several lifetimes, the circumstances and conditions surrounding the music are worth considering.

At the risk of over-simplifying something of extraordinary complexity, it is nonetheless safe to say that the relationship between Wolfgang and his father, Leopold, was fraught with anxiety and difficulty. Wolfgang’s move in 1781 from Salzburg, where his family lived, to Vienna, was met with Leopold’s strong disapproval. It didn’t help that Wolfgang’s marriage to acclaimed soprano Constanze Weber on August 4, 1782 took place the day before Leopold’s consent, given under duress, arrived in the mail. On January 4, 1783, Wolfgang penned a letter to Leopold in which he vowed to compose a new Mass setting when he brought Constanze to Salzburg to meet the family. One would presume that this was an act of appeasement. When Wolfgang and Constanze made their journey to Salzburg later that year, the reception was politely cool. The Great Mass premiered at the Cathedral in Salzburg in October 1783, with Constanze singing one of the soprano solo roles. When we perform the Mass on Wednesday, and we get to the Christe eleison section, this is the voice of Constanze. It is sublime. It is also heartbreaking, knowing that Leopold never warmed to the marriage.

By the time Mozart and Haydn met (likely in 1784), Haydn was considered without dispute the greatest composer in Europe. At the time of their meeting, Haydn was 52 years old and Mozart was 28. Scholars debate the level of interaction between them, but these things we know: before their meeting, Mozart was so taken with Haydn’s string quartets that he composed six of his own and dedicated them to Haydn, to the delight of the elder composer. We also know that the two periodically played in string quartets together at social functions around Vienna, Haydn on violin, Mozart on viola. Contemporary reports suggest that neither of them was particularly good at these instruments! Finally, and most telling, are the words of the men themselves, in praise of one another. Haydn to Leopold Mozart upon the premiere of three of Wolfgang’s string quartets (February 12, 1785):

Before God and as an honest man I tell you that your son is the greatest composer known to me either in person or by name; he has taste, and, furthermore, the most profound knowledge of composition.

And this amusing anecdote from early Mozart biographer Franz Niemetschek:

At a private party, a new work of Joseph Haydn was being performed. Besides Mozart there were a number of other musicians present, among them a certain man who was never known to praise anyone but himself. He was standing next to Mozart and found fault with one thing after another. For a while Mozart listened patiently; when he could bear it no longer and the fault-finder once more conceitedly declared: ‘I would not have done that’, Mozart retorted: ‘Neither would I, but do you know why? Because neither of us could have thought of anything so appropriate.”

Shortly before Mozart’s untimely death, Haydn made his first of two tours to London, at the request of violinist and impresario Johann Peter Salomon. Haydn had long been employed as Kapellmeister in the court of the Esterházy princes in rural Hungary. In 1790, his contract was reduced, having the dual effects of reducing his salary, but allowing him to travel and concertize extensively. Since his music was already well known and loved in London, the tours across the Channel made him a rather wealthy man. His Symphony No. 97 in C Major, which premiered in May 1792, is one of the twelve “London Symphonies,” composed on those tours. As with most of Haydn’s music, the joy and humor contained therein are infectious and delightful.

MOZART’S GREAT MASS

Wednesday, October 22nd at 7:00 PM
Choir of St. Ignatius Loyola
K. Scott Warren, conductor
HAYDN Symphony No. 97
MOZART Great Mass in C minor

Sacred Music in a Sacred Space begins its Choral season with Mozart’s Great Mass in C minor — a majestic setting featuring double chorus. An intensely personal, rule-breaking composition, the Mass is a riveting statement about the complex mixture of joy and pain in human relationships, one that transcended the proscribed Austrian Mass tradition at the time of its composition.

Tickets: $65 Preferred | $55 General (Front) $50 General (Rear)
